Let's Start!

Everyone needs presentation skills!

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe jobs and careers in both work and social contexts appropriate for the interlocutor.

Ask your partner:

- How do you feel about giving a presentation in front of a group?
- How can you prepare for giving a presentation?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about events and experiences related to a job.
- I can ask for confirmation.
- I can explain how to develop presentation skills.

Let's Explore!

Kristi wants to deliver a killer presentation!

* "Killer" is an adjective that means really good.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

Bianca: Will you be able to remember everything from the workshop?
Kristi: Yeah, I jotted down lots of notes in my phone. Oh no! I left my phone at the workshop. I'm going to run back and look for it. I'll text you later.

Bianca: You never have good luck with that phone, do you?
Kristi: Hi. I think I left my phone here. Did you see it?
Man: No, sorry. But feel free to look around. I'll go see if it was turned in to the presenter.

Kristi: Thanks. I'll look where I was sitting. I can scarcely keep my phone organized, can I? How will I get organized enough to find a job?

This looks interesting. "How to Improve Your Presentation Skills." Most people rarely enjoy giving presentations, do they? I get so nervous. Maybe this can give me something to help me focus when I am giving one. Let's see ...

"Number one, a good presentation is planned with the end in mind. Decide exactly how you want your presentation to be received. Is it your intention to persuade your audience? Do you want to inspire them? Do you want to inform them? The purpose of your presentation needs to be made clear from the start.

"Next, keep it simple." Of course. People are more engaged by presentations that are easy to follow. You rarely pay attention to a dense and complex presentation, do you? "Don't wing it, but don't memorize it. A presentation needs to be practiced out loud and delivered naturally."

This is interesting ... "Speak in questions. There are two types of presenters. There are those presenters who see themselves as experts in a particular area. There are others who prefer to facilitate. They get people to converse. They want their audience to ask questions and explore possibilities, so they make their environment conducive to doing just that. To make this happen, they include questions in their presentation." You hardly ever hear questions, do you? That's something to think about.

Let's Practice!

Kristi retraces her steps* to look for her phone.

*To retrace your steps means to go back the way you came.

Instructions: Circle the incorrect words. Write the sentences correctly.

1. You never have good luck with that phone , do not you ?

2. I can not scarcely keep my phone organized , can I ?

3. Most people rarely enjoy giving presentations , do they not ?

4. You rarely pay attention to a dense and complex presentation , did do you ?

5. You hardly ever never hear questions , do you ?

Let's Practice!

Kristi gives advice about making a presentation. What does she say?

Instructions: Organize the mystery sentences. Read the clues. Put a check on the word that best complete each sentence.

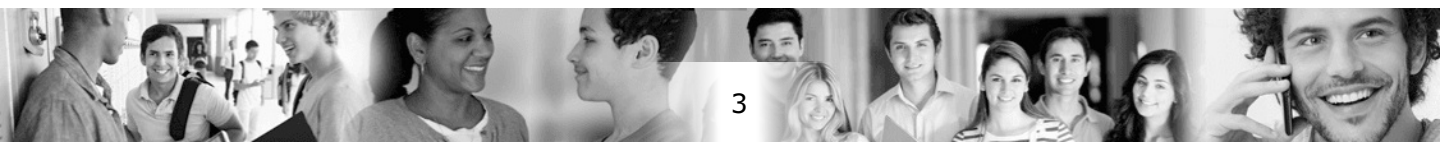

1. planned / mind. / is / end / the / with / presentation / in / A / good

2. be / made / to / from / needs / start. / purpose / clear / The / the

3. that / presentations / by / engaged / are / easy / more / follow. / are / People / to

Tag Questions with Negative Adverbs

You use tag questions in spoken English to get clarification and confirmation. Sometimes they are used in an affirmative sentence but with a negative adverb.

Question tags are short questions at the end of statements.

They are mainly used in speech when we want to:

- confirm that something is true or not, or
- to encourage a reply from the person we are speaking to.

A positive statement is followed by a negative question tag. Use this when you think the other person will agree by saying 'yes'.

Negative adverbs

Some adverbs always infer the negative. These are adverbs such as: rarely, never, seldom, scarcely and hardly. They change the feeling of a sentence from positive to negative. Therefore, statements including these adverbs become negative statements. This means that when a question tag is added, it will be a positive one.

Most people rarely enjoy giving presentations,	do they?
I can scarcely keep my phone organized,	can I?
You hardly ever hear questions,	do you?
You never have good luck with that phone,	do you?
You rarely pay attention to a dense and complex presentation,	do you?

Presentation Skills

To deliver a great presentation there are some skills that you need. The skills below will help you make your presentation a great one.

- Start by considering the end.

- Decide what you want your presentation to do. Do you want it to persuade, inform or inspire?
- Develop a presentation that includes all the necessary components.

- Keep it simple.

- Don't try to put too much information in the presentation.
- Keep PowerPoint slides simple. (3 bullet points per slide)

- Don't wing it, but don't memorize.

- Only the important sections of your speech need to be memorized.
- Use cue cards if you need to make notes.
- Practice your presentation out loud.

- Include lots of questions.

- Use questions in your presentation to engage and persuade others.

- Focus on quality, not quantity.

- Choose a specific idea to anchor your talk and build your presentation around it.

- Smile!

- During the presentation, smile, take deep breaths, and pause.

Examples:

- A good presentation is planned with the end in mind.
- The purpose needs to be made clear from the start.
- People are more engaged by presentations that are easy to follow.
- A presentation needs to be practiced out loud and delivered naturally.
