Let's Start!

Let's prepare to write a résumé!

Learning Outcome

Identify and describe jobs and careers in both work and social contexts appropriate for the interlocutor.

Ask your partner:

- What should you do before you start writing your résumé?
- What do you know about the different types and styles of résumés?

Can Do Statements

- I can explain what to consider before writing a résumé.
- I can talk about general issues related to a job search.
- I can talk about events and experiences related to a job.

Let's Explore!

Kristi gives a word to the wise about writing a résumé.

* "A word to the wise" is a tip from someone who has a lot of experience.

I just attended a great workshop on résumé writing. The notes that I took are copious and I'm summarizing them here so that you can benefit from what I learned. It is assumed to be easy to write a résumé, but it can be a challenge. There is a lot of work to be done. You need to think about these things before you sit down to write your résumé. Give yourself some time. Your résumé needs to be a reflection of who you are and what you can do, so really contemplate those elements of yourself.

Many different styles of résumés are reported to be used, but all résumés need to include four basic elements. Information about who you are, your name and contact information, is recommended to be included in the first section. Next, you need to include what you want, or your job objective. It's good to have this near the top of your résumé so that potential employers can see right away if your needs correspond with theirs. The next section should be about what you know. This section is expected to include details about your skills, qualifications, and work experience. The last section covers your education, which is to be listed in reverse chronological order.

Before you start writing, you should brainstorm your experience and skills. Make a list of your accomplishments and write down action verbs. Next, the type of résumé is to be considered. There are three basic types. Résumés can be set up chronologically, functionally, or with a combination of both. When a résumé is in chronological order it focuses on work experience. Your professional experience is listed in chronological order starting from your latest experience, back. Functional résumés concentrate on skills. A combination résumé is perfect if you are a first-time job seeker. It allows you to show any professional experience, while also allowing you to draw attention to any skills you have. This is especially important since, if you are just starting out, you will have limited work experience.

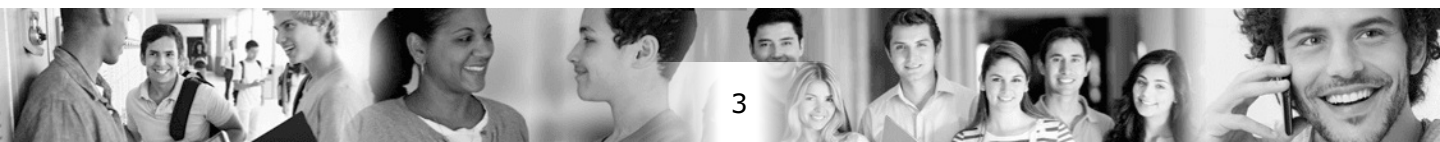

Let's Practice!

What are the requirements of a great résumé? Kristi explains.

Let's Practice!

What words does Kristi use to talk about résumés?

Instructions: Proofread the sentences. Cross out the incorrect words. Write the sentences correctly.

1) Employers want to see right away if your needs correct with theirs.

2) The last section covers your education, which is to be listed in reverse chronology order.

3) There are three basic types of résumés: chronological, fun and combination.

4) A combine style works well for first-time job seekers.

5) The notes that I took are couple.

6) I'm summing them here so that you can benefit from what I learned.

7) It is assumed to be easy to write a résumé, but it can be a chill.

8) You should rainstorm your experience and skills.

Extension Activity

Watch the movie: The Pursuit of Happiness.

Instructions: Complete the following steps. Fill in the Self-Assessment.

- Watch the movie: The Pursuit of Happiness.
- While you are watching, take notes on what Chris Gardner does to try to get a job.
- Write down any new vocabulary. Look it up in your dictionary.
- Write a paragraph summarizing his actions and comment on whether you agree or disagree with the things that he did.
- Present your summary and opinions to your class or group.

Target Words

- to correspond (verb): to match or be similar or equal e.g. Employers want to see right away if your needs correspond with theirs.
- chronological (adjective): following the order in which a series of events happened
e.g. When a résumé is in chronological order it focuses on your work your experience.
- functional (adjective): designed to be practical and useful rather than attractive e.g. There are three basic types of résumés: chronological, functional and combination.
- combination (noun): the mixture you get when two or more things are combined e.g. A combination résumé is perfect if you are a first-time job seeker.
- copious (adjective): in large amounts, or more than enough e.g. The notes that I took are copious.
- to summarize (verb): to reduce a piece of writing to the main points e.g. I'm summarizing them here so that you can benefit from what I learned.
- challenge (noun): a difficult task
e.g. It is assumed to be easy to write a résumé, but it can be a challenge.
- to brainstorm (verb): to suggest a lot of ideas very quickly before considering some of them more carefully
e.g. You should brainstorm your experience and skills.

Learning Points

The Simple Present Passive with Infinitive Verbs

You use an active structure when you want the 'doer' of the action to be the subject.
You use a passive structure when you want the 'receiver' of the action to be the subject.

In active sentences, the subject of the sentence does the action and the object of the sentence receives the action. The majority of sentences are active.

[Thing doing action] + [verb] + [thing receiving action]

For example:

Active sentence = Employers (subject) advertise most jobs (object) online.

In passive sentences, the object has been moved to the subject position. So, in a passive sentence the subject receives the action. The person or thing doing the action is either no longer in the sentence, or is included in a 'by' phrase.

Sometimes you use the passive voice with an infinitive verb.

The passive infinitive is made up of the marker to + be + a past participle.

For example:

The type of résumé is to be considered. (Passive)

People are to consider the type of résumé. (Active)

The majority of verbs you will use have an active infinitive form (with or without to): (to) summarize, (to) attend, (to) learn, (to) report.

The majority of verbs you will use can also have a passive infinitive form. This is made up of the infinitive of be (with or without to) + the past participle: (to) be summarized, (to) be given, (to) be learned, (to) be reported.

This is a formal structure used mostly in writing.

Examples:

- There is a lot of work to be done.
- Many different styles of résumés are reported to be used.
- This section is expected to include details about your skills, qualifications and work experience.
- The last section covers your education, which is to be listed in reverse chronological order.
- Next, the type of résumé is to be considered.

Learning Points

Requirements of a résumé

There are many different types and styles of résumés. Which type or style you choose may depend on the type of job you apply for. However, there are basic elements that must be included in every résumé.

A résumé must contain four key sections:

1) WHO YOU ARE:

The Heading – Your name, and your contact information – e-mail address, phone numbers and postal address.

2) WHAT YOU WANT:

Job Objective – One to three lines about the position you are interested in, what you are good at, what you want to do, and how it will benefit the employer.

3) WHAT YOU KNOW:

Summary/Profile (Optional): A short section with key statements that highlight your skills and experience. This has to work as an appetizer, tempting the reader to read the whole thing.

Skills and Qualifications (Optional): A brief, to-the-point list (with sub-headers, if necessary) of your skills, areas of expertise, certifications and accomplishments that are relevant to the job on hand.

Experience summary: A listing of all the jobs you've held in your career, in reverse chronological order (the latest listed first). Within each job, mention clearly the name of the company, your designation, your role and your major contributions.

4) WHAT YOU HAVE STUDIED:

Education: List your education and training in reverse chronological order, along with where you have studied.

Examples:

- Résumés need to include four basic elements.
- Information about who you are, your name and contact information, is recommended to be included in the first section.
- It's good to have this near the top of your résumé so that potential employers can see right away if your needs correspond with theirs.
- Next, you need to include what you want, or your job objective.
- The next section should be about what you know.
- The last section covers your education, listed in reverse chronological order.
- There are three basic types of résumés: chronological, functional and combination.
